WHAT WE COVERED

This was our first hypnotherapy session (the deeper work). We accomplished five things:

1. We explored a triggering situation from your week: You shared a workplace experience where a customer's behavior triggered internal judgment, followed by guilt about that judgment. We used this as a window into understanding how your mind processes conflict and self-assessment.
2. Separating identity from behavior: A core principle we established: you are not your reactions. Emotions are situational responses to specific inputs — they do not define who you are. Labeling yourself based on a momentary reaction damages your self-esteem unnecessarily. Like an actor playing different roles, none of those roles is the core you.
3. Understanding emotional triggers: We identified patterns in how you respond to perceived disrespect and how those responses connect to earlier life experiences. We discussed desensitization — not becoming numb, but reducing how much a trigger affects your inner sense of self so your responses become conscious choices rather than automatic reactions.
4. Hypnotherapy induction + tribe circle visualization: I guided you into a deeply relaxed state using breathing, affirmations, and a countdown technique. In that deep state, you built a circle of 11 supportive figures around you — your "soul tribe" — each representing a quality you need (bravery, care, self-esteem, belonging, and others). These were integrated into your body and sealed with protective energy.
5. Anchor installation: We installed a physical anchor — pressing your thumb and forefinger together on your right hand — that instantly returns you to the integrated, protected, self-assured state from the visualization. You can use this anytime you need it.

KEY CONCEPTS FROM THIS SESSION

Identity vs. behavior: Your reactions are not your identity. They are contextual, triggered by specific situations. You can observe them, understand them, and change them — without judging yourself for having them.

Projection: How we judge others often reflects our own inner wounds and fears. As those wounds heal, judgment of others naturally softens.

Desensitization: Reducing how much a trigger affects your ego and self-esteem, so your responses become chosen rather than automatic. Not numb — responsive and engaged, without the inner self being breached.

The rescuer in you: You have a natural capacity for bravery and care (the river rescue, the beach memory). When someone is rude or angry, you can reframe it as them struggling rather than them attacking you. This shifts you from defender to helper — a much more powerful position.

WHAT YOU REPORTED AFTER THE SESSION

You described feeling "more steady" and said the experience was like "almost having an armor or a shield." This indicates the tribe integration and anchor installation landed effectively. The protective energy you built is real and accessible to you.

PROGRESS SINCE SESSION 1

You reported that since our first session, it became "easier to observe thoughts and emotions without immediately reacting — watching them arise and letting them be, even when negative." This observer-stance is a significant development and forms the foundation for all our future work.

UPDATED TREATMENT PLAN

#	FOCUS	STATUS
1	Assessment + intake + suggestibility + EFT introduction	Completed (Oct 8)
2a	Identity reframing + trigger desensitization + tribe circle + anchor installation	Completed (Oct 16)

2b	Circle Therapy: systematic desensitization of specific triggers in trance	Next session
3	Trust + vulnerability work (graduated trust building)	Upcoming
4	Processing unresolved relationships + boundaries	Upcoming
5	Integration + self-regulation independence	Upcoming

WHAT HAPPENS IN SESSION 2B (NEXT SESSION)

Session 2b builds directly on tonight's work. Here is what to expect:

- We will start with a check-in and collect baseline measurements (1-10 scales across six areas)
- I will guide you back into a deeply relaxed state using the same techniques from tonight
- You will stand inside a protective circle — connected to the tribe energy you built tonight
- While in that deep relaxation, we will gently introduce your triggers (at a comfortable, controlled level) and let your nervous system learn that it can stay calm even when the trigger is present. Each cycle weakens the old automatic reaction.
- We will strengthen and expand the thumb-forefinger anchor
- This session will be recorded so you can listen between sessions

YOUR HOMEWORK BEFORE SESSION 2B

Please practice these before our next session:

1. Tribe visualization before sleep (every night)
   Before falling asleep, close your eyes and picture the 11 members of your tribe circle around you. Feel their energy. Feel the protective golden light. Let yourself fall asleep inside that circle. Each time you do this, the neural pathways get stronger.
2. Use the thumb-forefinger anchor
   Press your thumb and forefinger together on your right hand whenever you feel doubt, anxiety, or are disturbed by a situation. Close your eyes briefly if you can. The integrated, protected state from our session will return. Use it at work, before a difficult conversation, or anytime you need steadiness.
3. Practice the rescuer-helper frame
   When someone is rude, dismissive, or difficult: instead of internalizing it ("they're disrespecting me"), try shifting to "they're struggling." You are the rescuer, not the target. This does not mean accepting bad behavior — it means their behavior does not breach your inner self.
4. Send me a mid-week update
   Sometime mid-week or early next week, email me a brief update on how the practices are working in real life. What worked? What was hard? Any situations where you used the anchor or the reframe?
   Email to: jeeth@vrishihypno.com

IMPORTANT REMINDERS

If anything feels overwhelming between sessions:

1. Use the anchor: Thumb and forefinger together, right hand. One breath. Let the steadiness return.
2. Email me: jeeth@vrishihypno.com — I will respond within 24 hours.
3. If urgent or in crisis: Call or text 988 (Suicide and Crisis Lifeline). Available 24/7. You are not alone.
