Fear of Being Alone

Fear of Being Alone

Begin with your favorite Induction and Deepener from Hypnotic World.

As you drift deeper into this calm and comfortable feeling, I will be talking to you about the way you have been feeling and helping your subconscious mind to change its perception on being alone.

Whether being alone is a new transition in your life or a situation you have been in for a while, you realise that you need to confront any fear and then turn it around to your own advantage.

And of course, there are many advantages to being alone.

Having a partner isn't always the rosy picture that people are prone to paint.

The truth is that none of us know what goes one behind another person's closed doors and we only hear what those people want to tell us.

Another factor is that, as humans, we often want what we haven't got instead of being content with what is there for us.

Of course, this doesn't rule out that your situation could change at any time and you may meet someone with whom you would like to share your life.

And if this happens then that is great.

And if it doesn't happen that is also great because you are going to feel happy with your life regardless of if you are with someone else.

I am sure you have been told many times that you truly are a wonderful, unique individual and whether or not you believe it, it is certainly true.

In the beginning, you fought all the odds to exist.

Your chances of even being conceived were millions to one and yet here you are, having survived all the trials and tribulations that life threw in your path.

I know that you have had a fear of being alone because you thought you needed someone else to validate who you were and are.

And this is why you have now decided that it is time to be happy in your own company.

And I wonder if you have ever taken a step back to observe who you are and appreciate yourself for all that you do.

It is not easy to get to know ourselves when we are always reliant on others but this is your opportunity to learn more about you.

This is a new period of your life where the focus of your attention is you for a change and not someone else.

And it is a wonderful feeling to know that you don't have to worry about pleasing other people or letting them down.

It's nice to be able to do and enjoy doing what you want to do.

And it is good to be able to stand on your own two feet and open your arms to welcome a new independent life.

And this is exactly what you are going to do. You are going to challenge that old fear of being alone and you will come out on top, not because I say so but because you have decided that this is what you want.

If you have ever been in a relationship with a negative person you will remember the immense feelings of relief once that relationship was over.

Yes, there may have been a little apprehension as well; this is normal when established patterns in life change but you cope.

You cope because you are a mature adult with a mind and a will of your own.

On the other hand, it could be that you are in a bad relationship at present and the only thing has stopped you from freeing yourself is that you didn't like the thought of being alone.

If this is the case, remember that it is just a thought, nothing else.

And thoughts can be thoughts but you don't have to think them.

You can change your thoughts whenever you wish.

And when you change your thoughts, you also change your feelings about whatever it was that was making you anxious.

Imagine now that you are in company with a group of shallow people with whom you have nothing in common.

No matter how hard you try, you find it difficult to build up any enthusiasm for what they are doing or saying.

After a while, just being with these people begins to feel like a strain and you think about all the things you could be doing if you weren't with them.

Eventually, you decide to go home so you excuse yourself and make your way back to where you live.

Now imagine yourself at your own front door.

You are holding your key and turning the lock as you open the door of your empty house.

And as you close the door behind you and turn on the light you are greeted with a wonderful feeling of safety and comfort and familiarity.

It is such a relief to be back in your own surroundings and back in your home.

You close and lock the door and take off your coat.

You look around at the familiar things in your house.

There is your own comfortable chair, other furniture, perhaps a TV and maybe pictures on the wall that you've chosen or been given as gifts.

All these are things that you have carefully and loving surrounded yourself within your home and they represent you.

They represent your tastes, and your individuality and your uniqueness.

You realize how lucky you are to have the comfort of your own nest where you can escape from the hustles and bustles of everyday life and can nurture and enjoy your own peace and solitude.

You can do whatever you want to do here.

You can listen to music or watch what you want on TV.

You can have hobbies that you enjoy and become so totally absorbed in that it's easy to lose track of time.

Here in your home, you may have a landline or mobile, computer or iPad that opens up lines of communication for you to use if ever you want contact with other people.

But right now you are so happy to be alone.

So just enjoy these wonderful feelings right now.

And do you know - when you are tired and it is time for you to go to bed and to sleep, you can really enjoy a wonderful experience as your subconscious mind takes you on many exciting journeys into the realms of your subconscious, dreaming mind.

You can really discover interesting things about yourself that you may have forgotten or not given much thought to before now.

You can visit interesting places like a wonderful beach on a warm, sun-kissed Tropical Island.

Or, take a ride in a boat down a beautiful river rocking gently from side to side as you drift off to sleep.

Perhaps there are lovely memories that you thought you'd forgotten.

If so, you can recapture and relive them now on your wonderful journey into sweet repose.

You can do anything; you can be anyone in your dreaming mind because everything and anything is possible.

And while you are dreaming, you can mentally rehearse future situations to make your life even more fun and exciting in the future.

You can feel really good.

And so, you're beginning to feel really so much more comfortable now with your own company.

You are developing an inner sense of peace, harmony and tranquillity.

And you find that every time you come home you can thoroughly enjoy these wonderful feelings again because you are enjoying your own company more and more.

Your mind is now open and receptive to possible future experiences because you know that you are in control and can shape your future in any way you wish.

Perhaps you will start this process right now by creating your own wish list of interesting and exciting things that you intend to do in the next few months.

I will be quiet for a few moments as you begin to compile some possible fun experiences.

Nod your head when you have thought of three things that you intend to do.

A short pause as you wait for an indication.

And it is nice to know that there is no one else to consider or to stand in your way.

You can begin to prepare for whatever it is that is at the top of your list.

Allow a date to pop into your head for when you will have fulfilled your wish.

Now project your mind into the future and imagine this date has already arrived.

Short pause.

See yourself doing whatever it is you have decided to do.

Experience yourself in this situation and make this experience vivid and clear, bright and colorful and full of positive feelings.

You are now doing things that you want to do and it is a wonderful feeling to know that you are enjoying your life and that you have this control over your future and no-one can stand in your way.

As you enjoy learning more about your own likes and dislikes, you decide to help others in the same position as you once were.

There are many other people in the world and indeed, in your own community, who are alone and would like a friend or someone to share a few hours of their time with.

You begin to think about this whenever you go out; remember, there is no way to know what is happening behind those closed doors in other people’s private lives.

So you decide to bring cheer into the life of people you meet.

You greet others with a smile and a bright hello and when you see that someone needs help, you are the first to offer it to them.

Some of these encounters may be turned down or eyed with suspicion; if so, you realise that those people are wrapped in their own sad little words and aren't expecting someone to be nice to them.

And other encounters can lead to deeper friendships developing.

And if they don't, that is fine because you are happy to know that you have offered and your kindness is usually welcome.

You might find yourself volunteering to help with people who are not as fortunate as you or joining or even setting up your own club where people can meet.

Perhaps you will become an organizer and arrange meetings or invite people you know to a party or on an outing, instead of being the bystander, waiting for someone else to make the first move.

Or you may find yourself getting involved in projects in the wider community and increasing the chances of meeting someone with whom you might share your life.

But you realise that if you do, that is great, and if you don't, that is also great, because you are feeling happier with your life regardless of whom you are with or if you are alone.

And every day you become happier and more optimistic.

Every day you feel inspired to do something new.

And this makes you feel good. You enjoy making others happy because this makes you happy and you find yourself wearing a smile that lets people know how approachable you are.

And these suggestions are firmly embedded in your subconscious mind and they grow stronger and stronger day by day.

They grow stronger by the day, stronger by the hour, stronger by the minute.

In a moment I'm going to count from one to five and at the count of five, you'll be wide awake.

One, two, three, coming slowly back.

Four, your eyelids are beginning to flutter.

And five, eyes open, wide awake, your mind and body returning to normal conscious awareness.
