Fear of Rejection

Begin with your favorite Induction and Deepener from Hypnotic World.

You are now feeling completely relaxed from the top of your head all the way down to the tips of your toes, and your mind is open and receptive to all the positive suggestions you are going to hear.

I know that for a long time now, you have been troubled by a fear of being rejected.

I don't know how, or why, you have felt that way, but your inner mind knows everything that has ever happened to you.

It knows every thought you've ever had. It knows every feeling and every emotion you have ever experienced.

All is recorded here in your wonderful subconscious mind.

And today, with the help of your wonderful, subconscious mind, we are going to go back in time to the very first time that you felt that way.

We are going to go back and change any negative conditioning that led to your fear of rejection.

And we are going to help you to feel more confident instead.

So let us begin. We are going way back to your earliest memories to explore your earlier childhood.

Just allow your mind to drift and wander back in time.

As you do this, imagine yourself in an attic at the top of a very old house.

The attic has a sloped beamed roof and there is a window looking out onto the city beyond.

It is almost midnight and the moonlight is flooding through the window, illuminating the attic with its silvery glow.

As you look around, you notice there is an old chest here in the attic.

There is an old chest and a child's rocking horse and a small bed with a canopy.

There are toy soldiers and a rag doll slouched in one corner of the attic; they look rejected too.

Outside in the city is a tall clock tower. There is also a river that winds around the town like a ribbon of silver in the moonlight.

Further into the distance, you notice a bridge and rolling countryside.

The clock tower is beginning to toll the hour of midnight.

As it strikes the first chime you notice the clouds drifting over the moon, transparent in the moonlight and you find your mind wandering gently back to earlier times.

The clock strikes a second time and a soft gentle breeze wafts into the room through the slightly open window.

You find your mind going further and further back with each strike of the clock.

And at the third strike of the clock, you notice the sweet heavy scent of lilac in the still night air.

At the fourth strike, you hear the sound of a cat meowing on a wall below.

And on the strike of five, you notice the sound of a car going by; it sounds its horn in the night.

At the sixth chime, you walk over to the window and look outside, noticing the stars up there in the night sky, twinkling away.

As the clock strikes seven, you notice stardust floating into your room, filling it with a golden glow.

And at the eighth chime, your body begins to feel light and weightless and you feel as though there is no gravity holding you down.

At nine, you begin to float out of the window and into the city beyond.

The tenth chime sounds very distant and quieter now.

On the eleventh chime, you find yourself going all the way back in time to your childhood days.

And on the twelfth chime, you are back there experiencing the highs and lows of your childhood days.

Pause for a few seconds.

Remember good and bad times alike but in particular, I want you to find a memory from your earlier life that is linked to your current problem.

Short pause.

You are remembering a time that you felt rejected in a way that was going to affect you for many years to come.

But as this memory comes to mind, you find you can see it as though you are looking from a completely new perspective.

You are aware of your younger self and at the same time you have the insight and understanding of the adult you, the wiser you, that you are now.

And I want that adult you to go back to the child you that was and reassure or do or say whatever you instinctively know needs to be said or done.

Whatever your child needed at that time, give it.

Give your child love and warmth.

Give your child attention and understanding.

Tell your child that you are your own best friend.

And as you remake friends with yourself an amazing thing begins to happen; you realize that you no longer need to fear rejection from anyone in the whole world.

Because you accept yourself; that's right, you are your own best friend.

You understand with clarity and wisdom that there will be times that people reject something you say or do but you also know that it is not really you who they're rejecting.

It is the same as if someone suggests something to you that you really think is a bad idea.

You say so; perhaps more tactfully than some people would but you are certainly not rejecting that person. You are only rejecting the idea they are putting forward.

And more and more you are beginning to like yourself for the wonderful person you are.

You accept yourself.

You are kind to yourself and you are kind to others.

You find you don't need to be worried about what others think or say about you.

It really does not matter what they think or say, as long as you, yes, you, accept yourself.

And you do.

So as long as you are true to yourself, you don't need to please others. If they don’t accept the way that you are then that is their problem, not yours.

You begin to see situations with more clarity and understanding and no longer fear being rejected.

You have a lifetime of experience and ideas to put forward and if others don’t agree with your views or ideas it is no big deal to you.

You accept that sometimes others will disagree with you and this can help you to grow and to learn and to understand more about how they see the world.

You realise that it doesn’t necessarily mean that your ideas are wrong; perhaps they just don’t fit in with their own agenda.

Of course, there may be times when your ideas are out of line, so if and when they are, you reconsider or refine your previous way of thinking or ask for feedback and constructive criticism.

You are not afraid to put forward your own opinions anymore because you see that you have just as much right to them as does anyone else.

When you meet new people you automatically expect that they will like you because you have given them no reason not to.

And if others don’t welcome you with open arms you accept that they may have good reason to be cautious.

Perhaps they have been hurt or let down or maybe they are preoccupied with other things that are going on in their lives.

If that happens then you respond appropriately without taking offence.

You find that the majority of people will welcome you into their lives so you approach them with genuine warmth and a smile and try to find common ground to talk about.

As you drift deeper into hypnosis, I want you to go back to your inner child and do or say whatever you need to do or say.

Reassure your child that you are fine as you are and there is no need to fear rejection.

Your inner child was, and still is, a sensitive being but at times perhaps it was a little too over-sensitive.

Give your inner child positive advice and allow your child to see that sometimes, other people weren't always in a good place and that was often the reason they appeared to reject you.

And now I wonder if you can remember times from your past when you weren't rejected.

I know, you know and your inner child is also aware that there were many times when you were welcomed into the company of others.

It is strange how we often seem to remember the negative times in our lives but here in hypnosis, you are now remembering other situations when you were openly accepted and your company was even sought out.

I will be quiet again for a moment and I want you to explore three separate times when you were accepted by someone else.

Nod your head when these memories come forward.

Wait for signal – three times.

That's good. And now you know there is no rational reason to fear rejection. Your old fear was an emotion blown up out of proportion until it seemed magnified in your mind.

But you are now open to the reality behind that old feeling and you know there is nothing and no one to fear.

You begin to see yourself as an equal to others. You are a good and worthwhile person and you are happy to approach people, whether you know them or not and if the situation is appropriate, with a warm and welcoming smile.

You see that people have no reason to reject you and if they have no reason then why would they reject you.

People like people; most of us are a very sociable species and everyone likes to make friends.

As your confidence increases that old fear of yours fades and you find yourself receiving more invitations to join in with your peers.

And your confidence is increasing. Every day you approach at least one new person with a smile or a warm word.

Perhaps you just wish them a good day or ask how they are.

Maybe you pay them a compliment or offer help when they need it.

Sometimes these encounters lead to a full conversation and at other times they don't.

And if they don't lead to anything else, well, that doesn't matter because it makes you feel good to be nice.

In a few moments we are going to return to the here and now so I want you to thank your inner child for coming forward today.

Tell your inner child you will always be here to reassure or comfort or simply encourage; you will do or say whatever needs to be done or said.

But for now, bid your child farewell and know in your heart of hearts that you are just as good as anyone else and others have no reason to reject you.

And in just a few short weeks, you will find yourself looking back on the old fearful you and wondering why on earth you allowed yourself to fear rejection.

And these changes are already beginning to take place and will continue to do so long after this session is over.

In a moment, I'm going to count from one to five and at the count of five, you'll be wide awake and these suggestions are already firmly embedded in your subconscious mind.

One - two - three - four - eyelids beginning to flutter - and five - coming all the way back to the present time and a normal level of conscious awareness - mind and body relaxed and alert and focused on all the good things in your life.
