Every one of us has an inner child locked away inside of us, put there long ago during our real childhood when we were forced to hide our true feelings and emotions.

Your inner child has always been a creative, curious and playful being with a desire to belong.

Like an untrained puppy, it might sometimes leap up in places it shouldn't, hoping to be rewarded by a pat or a kind word but instead, on receiving a reprimand, slouched back to its corner with its tail between its legs.

Eventually, the puppy learned obedience and curtailed much of its inquisitiveness, trotting instead by its master's side, doing as it was told and losing an important part of its individuality.

Just like the puppy, sometime in your childhood, you were forced to abandon your childish notions and behavior because some adult decided that you needed to "grow up".

And not knowing any better, you obeyed them, because that is what children do.

Of course, in many ways, this was good as it taught you important social skills and prepared you for the harsh reality of life.

But at the time, those adults didn't realise the effect it would have later on in your adult life.

They didn't know how you felt when you hid your feelings of rejection, hurt, or other negative emotions; how could they? And perhaps for your part, you didn't tell them.

After all, it's quite common for children, and indeed, many adults, to contain their feelings and suffer in silence, not wishing to impose themselves upon others.

You might well wonder why adults feel compelled to encourage children to modify their behavior or stifle the creative side of their nature.

Why can't children act like children?

Why can't adolescents revert to childlike behavior?

Why must adults behave like adults?

The answer is because we are programmed this way by society.

And adults' control of behavior is influenced by what happened to them during their own childhood, and they believe that it is the correct way to nurture children and help them to grow into responsible adults.

Perhaps you were told not to be stupid when you gave your opinion as a child, or that children should be seen and not heard.

Maybe you received negative reactions instead of praise when you did something right, or perhaps the adults in your life constantly commented on or criticized your mistakes and perceived failures?

I'm willing to bet that if you think hard enough you will remember a time when you also told at least one other person to "grow up" because they were behaving in a manner which either offended or embarrassed you.

But why should anyone have to change their behavior just to suit another person's expectations?

These types of putdowns can leave mental scars deep within our psyche which are detrimental to our growing up process.

They contribute towards shaping our character and can lead to people feeling less motivated and at odds with themselves when it comes to coping with life.

So, to get the best out of your life you need to re-establish contact with your inner child, invite it forward and listen carefully to what your inner child has to say.

Listen and learn more about your potential.

Learn how to release those suppressed and repressed emotions and feelings and finally make your inner child happy and playful again.

Listen and understand why your inner child was unhappy and help it find ways of resolving that unhappiness.

Listen and respond in the way that you would have loved to have been responded to at the time those events originally occurred.

Now is your chance to find and fix any and all negative feelings and emotions that your inner child has been suffering from.

To do this, I want you to go back in your mind now.

Go back to a time when you were experiencing the issues that have been bothering you recently.

You might need to go back to somewhere between 3 and 8 years of age; if so, just let your mind wander gently back in time, sifting carefully through the memories of the past as though there is no such thing as time.

Let your mind travel back now - and see or feel or experience or simply sense yourself becoming smaller, and younger, younger and smaller.

It may feel as though you are swirling through a long dark tunnel, or travelling over the bridge of time.

You might experience yourself on a vast beach with the ocean before you and the sands of time to the left and the right, representing your past and your future.

Whichever method you decide, just allow yourself to drift gently back now and signal yes to me when you are there as that young child again.

Wait for signal.

Good, now visualize yourself watching a huge screen with a movie being shown on it.

You are standing there in that house where you lived; the home that you knew as a very young child.

Look around the room. Notice how it looks; see the window, the table, the door, perhaps some shelves or cupboards and other furniture.

See yourself as a small child; notice your hairstyle and see what you are wearing. How high do you come to and what are you doing?

Perhaps you have a toy or a favorite game or book, or maybe you are with someone else. If so, notice this other person and know their relationship to you.

Wait for a while and have your client signal you when they have this memory.

How do you feel? Are you upset or happy? Identify a time when something bothered you but you had to suppress your feelings or emotions.

And as you watch your child self on the screen, know that during the whole of this experience, the you that is here in this room at this present moment in time will not, I repeat, will not, experience any distress at watching your inner child. Instead, there will be feelings of calm and curiosity because you really want to learn more about your inner child and how to help it.

And as you see or sense yourself at the time something really bothered you, perhaps you are experiencing strange feelings.

Are you aware of what’s happening?

You may be frightened or upset – or there may be other deeper emotions.

I want the adult you - who is here now listening to me – to go back and visit that young, innocent inner child.

See yourself as you are now, stepping forward to meet your younger self.

Introduce yourself to your inner child and quickly make friends with your child self.

Put your arms around them - embracing them warmly and comforting them.

Listen to your inner child's concerns and tell it that you understand.

Reassure your inner child that you know they did their very best because you know it: they had always done their very best.

Tell your inner child that from now on, you will be there for it - whenever your child may need you.

All it needs to do is to knock on the door of your subconscious mind, and you will instantly be there to calm and comfort offer reassurance and guidance.

The more you listen to your inner child, the more you learn.

And if anything should start to bother you again in the future, whether it is in your dreams, your daydreams or thoughts, know that you can go back inside and contact your inner child to find out exactly what the problem or problems may be.

You now know that you can pinpoint and correct whatever it is that's causing you concern with the help and guidance of your inner child and at last, your life will become stress-free and a most wonderful and enjoyable experience.

Now what may happen in the future is that sometimes you just get that gut feeling that you want to go inside for a short while and revisit your inner child self – and although consciously you may not be aware that you are with your inner child – the deepest part of your mind experiences a feeling of total unity within – and this creates beneficial sensations of harmony, joy, contentment and inner peace.

Notice how you now feel differently about any and all feelings and emotions which may have been troubling you, having made friends with your inner child.

You instinctively sense that from now on, everything is going to be fine.

Everything will all work out for the best as your subconscious mind continues to protect you in a way that allows you to develop your full adult potential.

Pause.

It’s time now to say goodbye to your inner child. Firmly assure your child that you will come back and visit - just like your inner child - can visit you.

And as you return to normal awakening consciousness, bring back with you new learnings, new possibilities and new avenues for you to explore.

Pause.

Say goodbye for now as I count from one to five, and at the count of five you will be wide - wide - awake - feeling already wonderfully invigorated and ready to allow these suggestions to work for you.

One.

Two.

Three - eyelids beginning to flicker.

Four - eyes opening.

Five - eyes open wide awake, mind and body returning to normality.
