Overcome Guilt

The reasons why people feel guilty will differ widely, and so it's important to establish where the pattern of emotion began by using exploratory techniques such as ideomotor signalling.

Begin with your favorite Induction and Deepener from Hypnotic World.

You are listening to me today because you have been experiencing feelings of guilt and would like to put these feelings into context and alleviate the negative effects that guilt has on your body and your mind.

There may have been times, in the past, when you, like everyone else, unintentionally did or said something that was inappropriate, perhaps even hurtful to someone else.

Maybe afterwards your mind dwelt on what had transpired, and you ran over and over the conversation in your head, beating yourself up about what you should, could or should not have said, or done or what others who were present at the time must have thought of you.

Sometimes we feel guilty for no logical or rational reason, we wish we'd said this or wish we'd reacted differently; this is human nature.

And it is because you are such a sensitive and thoughtful person that you take on the blame and that you experience feelings of guilt.

However, feelings of guilt are not helpful to anyone, least of all to yourself. People who constantly experience guilty feelings may have high expectations of themselves and feel they have let themselves down when they later reflect on how they responded to certain situations.

If you know that you have done something untoward, you can apologize and put the matter right, and if you haven't done something wrong, then it is time to let it go.

Short pause.

And now, in this comfortable state, your subconscious mind can begin to recognize something very important - and that is that guilt only belongs where harm has been done and when no harm is done, guilt has no place.

You are learning to distinguish the difference.

From this moment forward, whenever your mind tries to make you feel guilty for something that was never really wrong in the first place, you can pause, breathe, and remind yourself:

"I am innocent. I am free. I am worthy of peace."

The truth is that carrying guilt for no reason does not help you, and it certainly does not help anyone else.

Letting go allows you to be kinder, clearer, and stronger.

So, from now on, when you notice feelings of guilt rising without cause, your mind automatically guides you to release it.

In its place, you can notice a lightness in your chest, a softening in your body and you feel more balanced, more confident, more able to live your life without unnecessary burdens.

You are a human being; you are someone who is worthy of compassion, and you are allowed to be at peace.

You are allowed to feel good about yourself, without carrying blame that was never yours to hold.

Every day forward, you will feel this truth becoming stronger within you, and every time you practise this, it becomes easier, more natural, more lasting.

If you notice that feeling of guilt beginning to surface, I want you to go inside and imagine yourself walking along a path, carrying a heavy backpack that is weighing you down.

And after a long time of carrying the backpack and feeling the weight pulling on your shoulders, perhaps you can notice, a place just ahead of you, with a gentle stream that runs through the earth.

As you approach the stream, you slide the backpack off your shoulders and place it on the ground next to you and open the buckles, the zip or the clasp.

And looking inside, you notice that it was packed with stones, heavy stones that were weighing you down.

Imagine this now, as I am speaking to you.

Short pause.

Reach inside and pick out one of the stones, and drop it into the flowing water.

Short pause.

That's good, and now another, and another, until the backpack is completely empty, and see how the stream carries the stones away, easily, effortlessly, turning the heavy weight into ripples and the ripples into stillness.

Until all that remains is the clear water, and the freedom to walk more lightly, along your path.

That's good, you are doing really well. And your subconscious mind now has a useful strategy to help you to rid yourself of feelings of guilt.

But we are not finished yet, because I want to help you to understand why you have been experiencing those feelings so often.

In order to do this, we need to go back to one of your earliest connections with guilt and to whatever it was that formed that automatic response.

You may be aware that some psychologists believe that people who often suffer from feelings of guilt were taught to feel this way as children, and in many cases, this can later contribute to a guilt complex.

Now, this may or may not have happened to you, but to rule out the possibility, we are going to communicate directly with your subconscious mind and reprogram your mind to respond in a way that is healthier and more respectful for you in the future.

In order to do this, and with your permission, I am going to set up some finger signals so that your subconscious can communicate directly with me, without bringing you out of this beautiful trance state that you are enjoying.

So, nod your head if your subconscious mind is happy for us to explore the uncovered reasons for you responding that way.

Wait for a signal.

Thank you.

Set up ideomotor signals as follows:

I want you to focus your attention on the fingers of your right hand, that's right, and in your mind, think and feel the word yes over and over again.

Just repeat the word yes in your mind, and in a moment, you will notice a pulling or a tugging or a lifting sensation in that finger and the finger will raise or move as a sign and a signal to me.

Note which is the 'yes' finger and affirm this to your client, for example: your right index finger is now your yes finger, and when I ask a question that your subconscious mind knows the answer is yes, it will instinctively cause that yes finger to move, as a signal to me.

You are doing really well, and now we are going to repeat this process with your left hand and the word no. So, I want you to concentrate on the word no, repeat it over and over again in your mind, until you notice a similar sensation in one of the fingers of your left hand.

And when you notice a sensation in one of those fingers of your left hand, your subconscious mind will cause it to move as a sign and a signal to me.

Wait until you notice a movement in one of the fingers of the left hand and affirm what you see in a similar way to what you did with the word yes on the right hand.

That's good, and now, allow your mind wander to back in time now, to the very first time that you experienced those feelings of guilt.

Just allow yourself to drift further and further back in time, and when your inner mind is aware of that first instance where you felt guilty, let your yes finger signal yes to me.

You are drifting further and further back - see yourself getting younger and smaller.

Time can pass quickly in hypnosis - just as in sleep - we can lose all concept of time as we know it in normal conscious awareness, and a dream can seem to last for a long, long time when in reality only a few seconds have passed by.

Allow time for the yes finger to signal before continuing with the following, but continue taking the client further and further back if the signal is not shown immediately.

Now you are back at the very first time you experienced guilt, and I want your subconscious mind to answer me through your fingers.

Is this the first time that you feel those feelings of guilt?

If not, regress further back.

I want you to review that situation from an adult perspective - see what happened and why it happened - use all the understanding from your adult, compassionate self, to analyse the motivation behind that thought or action.

And you can take as long as you like in hypnosis - but three minutes of clock time will be all that you need to come to the realization that now is the time to forgive yourself, once and for all.

Signal 'yes' when your subconscious mind is happy to do this. If the signal isn't a positive one, you can assume that your client still feels guilty about the incident and continue as follows:

Subconscious mind, do you still feel guilty over that incident?

If the answer is 'yes', continue as follows:

Would you agree to release [unwarranted] guilty tension and let (name of client) be free from it, once and for all?

If the answer is no, continue:

Subconscious, (name of client) can easily handle this and fully accepts and realises that guilt only belongs where harm has been done and when no harm is done, guilt has no place.

Have you released that guilt now?

If the answer is no:

Does (client) get any benefit from that guilt? (if yes...) - does it protect (client)?

Does it serve any other purpose?

Does it cause (him/her) to be punished in some way?

Keep watching the finger signals and continue until you discover what the benefit is.

Is this the reason for the condition? (If yes)

Good. Subconscious mind (name of client) desperately needs (desired outcome), and I would like you now to release (client) from that punishment.

Would you agree to release (client)?

If the answer is still no, continue as follows:

Would you agree that if (name's) guilt was released, there would no longer be any reason for it?

The answer to this question will usually be 'yes'.

Subconscious mind, every punishment, even for the most serious crimes, must come to an end sometime.

Do you agree?

Wait for affirmation.

This punishment has gone on too long and is too severe, and it needs to be terminated right now so that (name of client) can get on with their life.

Do you agree with that?

Wait for affirmation; otherwise, work through any remaining objections.

Then will you now release (name)?

If all the objections have been covered, the answer to this should be 'yes'.

Good. Because you know it's easy, logical and so sensible to release (name) - the time has arrived, has it not?

Then I would like you to carry out that release when I count to three.

One, two, three, let go of that guilt, right now.

Verify that there are no remaining guilty feelings that need dealing with by asking:

Subconscious mind, have we effectively covered the reasons why (client) often carries guilt around?

If there are other reasons, then work through as above.

Now I want to thank the subconscious mind for coming forward today, in this way, to support (client's name) in dealing with those feelings of guilt that were so often present.

And I know, and the subconscious mind knows, that it is time to move on to healthier thoughts and feelings, and this means being kind to yourself and being kind to others.

Being kind doesn't automatically mean withholding the truth, but if you have something to say or do that is likely to be hurtful to the recipient, you automatically consider the feelings of other people.

You select your words carefully and kindly, as I know you always do. Of course, there are times when the truth does hurt, and if this happens, you say or do what you have to, in a kind and considerate way, and with a quiet assurance and confidence that alleviates any possible feelings of guilt.

Now, of course, there may be unexpected or exceptional circumstances where you do inadvertently say something hurtful and you realise that sometimes people carry feelings, heavy feelings, as if they were holding a stone in the hand.

And of course, after some time, the hand carrying the stone becomes tired, and the body may become weary,

But isn't it true, that when you set down the stone, the hand remembers how to open, how to rest, how to heal?

And your unconscious mind already knows that guilt is just the mind's way of saying something mattered and that you cared, and that you wanted things to be better.

And isn't it remarkable that caring can be transformed, into compassion, into wisdom, into a new beginning?

And as you listen, your inner mind can begin to learn.

It can learn how to let go of what no longer serves you, and hold onto what brings healing, kindness, and peace.

And your unconscious mind can remember to keep the wisdom, the lessons, the compassion, while allowing the heaviness to flow away.

And each day, in ways you may not even notice at first, you begin to feel lighter, more at peace, more able to breathe deeply, to live kindly and to move forward.

Short pause.

You have done really well today, and you have learned many things. You know when it is appropriate to experience feelings of guilt and when it's not, and when this happens, you have powerful strategies to free yourself from uncomfortable feelings.

Sometimes there may be lessons to be learned, and when this happens, your subconscious mind is open and receptive to accepting different ways of thinking and feeling.

And these suggestions are firmly embedded in your subconscious mind and grow stronger and stronger day by day.

They grow stronger by the day, stronger by the night, stronger by the hour.

And in a moment, I will count the numbers from one to five, and at the count of five, you will be fully alert and refreshed, and ready to allow these suggestions to work for you.

One, two, you are coming slowly back.

Three, already you are feeling lighter and freer.

Four, your eyelids are beginning to flicker.

And five, eyes open, wide awake, mind and body returning to full, conscious awareness.
