WHAT WE COVERED

This was a psychoeducation and planning session. We went deep into understanding the roots of what you have been experiencing, and we mapped the path forward together. Here is what we accomplished:

1. Your progress from Session 2 — protector energy in action: You shared a situation at work where angry visitors confronted you, and you handled it with calm, measured responses rather than getting reactive. You used the protector energy reframe from our last session — seeing their anger as their struggle, not an attack on you — and it worked. This kind of emotional regulation is significant. It reflects who you genuinely are underneath the old patterns.
2. We explored the deeper roots: You shared important details about your childhood that help us understand where the patterns come from. Growing up without consistent parental presence, being cared for by your grandfather (who worked hard to provide but had limited time for emotional connection), and navigating difficult relationships with other family members — all of this shaped how your nervous system learned to protect you. The guarding, the hypervigilance, the difficulty trusting — these were smart survival strategies for a child in those circumstances.
3. Abandonment and alienation — the real root: We identified that beneath the anxiety, trust issues, and self-esteem challenges, there is a core experience of feeling like an outsider. When you watch peers in your group connect emotionally and you feel like a stranger looking in, that is not a social skill problem — it is an old abandonment wound being triggered. The desire to be like them is not about admiring their specific qualities. It is about wanting to belong. And belonging is what was missing earliest.
4. Self-esteem reframed: We discussed how self-esteem is not just about positive affirmations or feeling good about yourself. Real self-esteem is built through esteemable acts — actions conducted with integrity, care, and responsibility. You already do these things (the way you handled those visitors is a perfect example). The gap is not in your behavior — it is in your ability to see and credit yourself for it, because the old abandonment wound keeps telling you that you are not enough.
5. Comparison to peers — recontextualized: Admiring what others have is not inherently a problem. It can even be motivating. But first you need to answer an honest question: "Do I genuinely want what they have, or am I reacting to the feeling of being excluded?" If it is exclusion, the solution is not to become like them — it is to heal the wound that makes you feel like an outsider in the first place.
6. The plan going forward: We agreed on a phased approach. First, we continue building conscious behavioral skills — things you can practice in real life, like the protector energy, the listener/helper role, and noticing your self-talk patterns. Once you have demonstrated that these tools are working in your daily life, we will move into deeper inner child work — where your adult self can go back and give that younger version of you what was missing: safety, validation, and the knowledge that none of it was your fault.

KEY CONCEPTS FROM THIS SESSION

Abandonment as root: The anxiety, hypervigilance, trust issues, and self-esteem challenges are symptoms. The root is feeling abandoned and alienated — the experience of being an outsider in situations where you should have been safe and included.

Known vs. unknown: Your mind prefers familiar discomfort over unfamiliar safety. Emotional guarding feels familiar (it kept you alive). Openness and trust feel risky, even when the people around you are objectively safe. Recognizing this is the first step to choosing differently.

Esteemable acts: Self-esteem is built through action, not affirmation. Every time you show up with integrity, help someone, hold a boundary, or express something authentic, you lay a brick. The structure is already being built — you just need to see it.

Identity vs. mimicry: The goal is not to become like the people you admire. The goal is to become more fully yourself — without the protective walls that childhood required. You do not need to eat pizza just because everyone else is eating pizza.

Protector energy: You proved this week that you can stay regulated in a genuinely triggering situation. That is not a technique you learned — it is a quality you already had. We are removing the barriers that prevent you from accessing it consistently.

PROGRESS ACROSS THREE SESSIONS

MARKER	SESSION 1 (OCT 8)	SESSION 2 (OCT 16)	SESSION 3 (OCT 24)
Observer stance	Not present	"Easier to watch thoughts arise and let them be"	Sustained + applied at work
Trigger response	Reactive, automatic	"Armor or shield" after tribe circle	Handled angry visitors calmly (real-world test)

Self-labeling	Not yet identified	"Asshole," "judgmental" (identified)	Root traced to abandonment wound
Root understanding	6 symptoms listed	Betrayal + abandonment + shame	Abandonment + alienation confirmed as core
Vulnerability	Fear of group settings	Tribe circle provided protective frame	Listener/helper strategy for Tuesday group

UPDATED TREATMENT PLAN

#	FOCUS	STATUS
1	Assessment + intake + suggestibility + EFT introduction	Completed (Oct 8)
2	Identity reframing + trigger desensitization + tribe circle + anchor	Completed (Oct 16)
3	Deep check-in + root wound identification + phased plan + psychoeducation	Completed (Oct 24)
4	Inner child work: abandonment wound + childhood blame + uncle-related trauma	Next session
5	Circle Therapy: systematic desensitization of specific triggers in trance	Upcoming
6	Trust + vulnerability + graduated openness	Upcoming
7–8	Integration + self-regulation independence + self-hypnosis	Contingency

WHAT HAPPENS NEXT (SESSION 4)

Session 4 will be our first inner child session — the deeper work. Here is what to expect:

- We will start with a check-in and review your journal from Tuesday's group session
- I will guide you into a deeply relaxed state using the same techniques from Session 2
- From that deep state, your adult self will observe a younger version of you — not reliving the past, but viewing it from adult perspective and adult safety
- You will have the opportunity to give that younger version what was missing: the words he needed to hear, the safety he deserved, the understanding that none of it was his fault
- We will work at your pace. You are always in control. Your exit signal (right index finger) is always active.
- This session will be recorded so you can listen between sessions

YOUR HOMEWORK BEFORE SESSION 4

Three things before our next session:

1. Before Tuesday's Mankind Project session:
   Do a short grounding practice (breathing, meditation, or just quiet sitting). Set this intention: "I am open. I am a healer. Nobody can hurt me." You do not need to believe it perfectly. Just say it and let it land.
2. During Tuesday's session — the listener/helper role:
   Do not force full emotional disclosure. Instead, focus on others. Listen to their problems. Offer empathy. Share ideas. Be the helper. This builds trust incrementally without exposing your guarded areas before you are ready. If there is a moment where something small and safe feels right to share — take it. But only if it feels right. Not because you think you should.
3. After Tuesday's session — journal and send to me:
   Within 24 hours of the group session, write down:
   - What still felt blocked? Where did the guard go up?
   - Why couldn't you open up further? What was the fear?
   - What emotions came up during the session?
   - Any moments of unexpected connection or ease?

   Email this to me: jeeth@vrishihypno.com
   I will use your journal to design the inner child work for our next session. Your observations are the blueprint.

TOOLS YOU ALREADY HAVE

Thumb-forefinger anchor: Right hand. One press, one breath. Activates the tribe circle energy, the armor, the protector. Use daily — morning, before difficult moments, before sleep.
Protector energy reframe: When someone is angry or difficult: "They are struggling." You are the rescuer, not the target. You proved this works at your job this week.
Breathing affirmation: "I am [word 1] and I am [word 2] and I like it." Three breaths. Morning and bedtime.

Tribe visualization:	Before sleep, picture the 11 members around you. Feel the golden light. Fall asleep inside the circle.
Session 2 recording:	Listen at least once more before our next session. Quiet place, eyes closed.

IMPORTANT REMINDERS

If anything feels overwhelming between sessions:

1. Use the anchor: Thumb and forefinger together, right hand. One breath. Let the steadiness return.
2. Email me: jeeth@vrishihypno.com — I will respond within 24 hours.
3. If urgent or in crisis: Call or text 988 (Suicide and Crisis Lifeline). Available 24/7. You are not alone.
